farisprudence presented an excellent field for a profitable investment of capital. The design of the act under consideration was to correct the unjust feature of the statute to which we have referred, and we are sure the wisdom the step must commend itself to every one who has taken the trouble to think upon the matter. Two things are essentially necessary to ensure the prosperity of a new country and promote the development of its resources, i. e., population and capital; and whatever stands in the way of these requirements should be removed! They are so inseparably connected the one with the other, that neither can be advantageously employed independently of the other. Hence the importance of so adapting legislation as that both may be utilized. The Cattle Exemption Act is a step in that direction. It is calculated to inspire confidence on the part of capitalists investing their means in live stock graziers, that in the event of adverse Celebrated Factory. fortune overtaking those to whom they have entrusted their property for safe keeping, that such property shall not be held liable to satisfy the demands of their at San Francisco rates with charges creditors; while, on the other hand, it added. affords a means whereby the poor man fe? with land, but destitute of cash wherewith to stock his farm with cattle of his ewn, may utilize his land by entering into an agreement with his more wealthy neighbor to take the oversight and care of such stock as may be entrusted to him, and share with him their natural increase as remuneration for the labor bestowed upon them. Our object in calling attention to this subject is that it may be brought more prominently to the notice of the public generally. From information received we have reason to believe that the existence of this statute is known to but comparatively few per-

Instead of weakness to us, he believed the colonies were a source of strength by the commercial relations they promoted. An interchange of ides and sympathies between England and her colonies would greatly help to keep them together. And if the Empire was to be kept together, it would only be under a monarchy. Of course, it was a question whether it was better to keep the British Empire together or have insular independence. He was certain that if they converted the British Empire into a Republic, it could only be an insular Republic. "THE ROAD STEAMERS."-It is stated that four of these steamers are to be returned to England by the Lady Lampson. Sad fate! We are reminded of a suggestion and we be-lieve a good one—viz, that the Corporation would do wisely to purchase one of them to be used in drawing gravel, sand, rock &c., for street repairing. It might also be turned to account in drawing earth to fill up, for instance, the mud flats, James Buy, or such like place.
